GOODBYE WEST BROADWAY

Citing gangs, shootings, Boom Island Brewing decides to flee the neighborhood

Last Friday, a shooting left one person dead and three others injured in north Minneapolis. One local business owner has had enough.

“How much worse can it get when you leave on Friday night, and there’s bullets flying around?” asks Kevin Welch, owner and head brewer at Boom Island Brewing Co. “The motivation is extremely dire for us to get the heck out of the area.”

Located at 2014 N. Washington Ave., Boom Island will have a new home by the end of the year, Welch predicts. He’s scouting real estate and plans to launch a crowd-sourced fundraiser to help with expenses.

When Welch started Boom Island in 2011, he hoped to help the neighborhoods around West Broadway grow, meeting with local politicians about being part of a transformation. He even moved to be closer to his business.

“But it hasn’t changed for the better,” he laments, citing the near-constant presence of gangs, drugs, and guns around his brewery/taproom.

Boom Island already closes at 9 p.m. on weekends—extremely early for a drinking establishment—to avoid trouble for its patrons and employees, Welch says.

“I’m not going to risk our employees dodging bullets,” he adds. “It’s not gonna change anytime soon.”

Welch hopes to keep Boom Island anchored in Minneapolis, but the emphasis is on relocating “as soon as possible.” The taproom will remain open during regular business hours (4-9 p.m. Wednesday-Friday; 1-9 p.m. Saturday; 1-6 p.m. Sunday) for the foreseeable future, Welch says. Boom Island’s Belgium-themed roster of beers is also available at liquor stores throughout the city.

Kevin and Giuxia Welch own Boom Island Brewing Co.

NEAL ST. ANTHONY

“This is literally all my retirement, all my everything,” Welch says. “It was a pretty loud signal what happened on Friday night.

That’s motivation—we gotta get out.”

Violent crime in Minneapolis increased 17 percent between 2011 and 2016, according to the Star Tribune. Though shootings in north Minneapolis have declined this year, there is growing concern about gang activity. A Minneapolis police spokesperson did not respond to our request for comment regarding crime around West Broadway.

Target hates unions. Why do liberals love it?

One July night in 2010, a block of Upper Manhattan grew thick with millionaires, the cream of the limousine-liberal crop. Down the red carpet came model Tyson Beckford, reality star Bethenny Frankel, music producer Moby, and Jerry Seinfeld. What occasion brought out these shiny celebs?

A new Target, the Minneapolis retail chain's 10th and most glittery to open in the nation's retail capital.

Imagine, not far outside the glow of those lights, 20-year-old Tashawna Green, a single mother getting through a far less glamorous night in her aunt's apartment in Queens.

Green just started work at a Target on Long Island, trying and failing to pay her bills on $8 an hour. A year later, she'd get a raise to $8.08—not nearly enough to get her off food stamps.

By then, Green had become an active player in the push to unionize her store's 200-some employees, only the second such vote in Target history. The first, in 1987, was defeated. So was Green's effort in Long Island, though not without Target running a few trick plays.

The store banned union buttons, workers said, and warned the location might close. The branch was then unexpectedly shut down for "renovations," scattering employees to various locations for months. (Target notes the National Labor Relations Board later "rejected in its entirety the union's claim related to the temporary closure.")

The union backers lost, 135-87. Green was later fired for what Target called her "hostile, disruptive manner." Organizers offered another reason: retaliation.

Seven years went by before Target's union-busting streak faced another New York election. Voting commenced Friday, and results rolled in by Saturday night. Again, Target's efforts to snuff the effort were successful: This one fell 118 to 39.

"We deeply value our store team in Huntington and want to thank them for their confidence in Target," the company said in a statement.

This time around, United Food and Commercial Workers again met with a red wave of opposition. Strange management-types started showing up, introducing themselves—first name only—and striking up conversations. "They flew folks in from Minneapolis and made it their number-one priority to... interrogate workers," says Aly Waddy, a UFCW 1500 organizer.

Target also tried to block the vote, arguing the drive was illegally hatched because a store supervisor "participated." Let's dwell on this: Faced with a workforce intent on banding together, Target objected by observing that one of its bosses agreed.

Target says it has systems in place to hear from employees. But: "We do not believe a union intermediary would improve that process in any way and we are committed to continuing to listen to and support all of our team members, who come together every day to proudly serve our guests."

It's strange to picture Target as a goon when we generally regard it as Minneapolis' friendly giant. On a recent night, the Super Target in northeast Minneapolis thrummed with shoppers in Gophers gear piling carts high with groceries, electronics, and towels.

These were educated urbanites in a city that leans ever leftward, even if its purchase habits don't. Mention Walmart and you'll get the scowl you deserve for giving money to blood-suckers. Say you're running to Target? "Oh, I'll come with!"

The company covers its wolf-paw prints with acts of decency, like trans-friendly bathrooms and charitable largesse. A Facebook video highlights Target's contribution to 10 "soccer play spaces" in Atlanta, the first of 100 nationwide, which mascot Bullseye the dog "really got a kick out of!"

But Target also makes charity cases of its rank-and-file. A Star Tribune comparison in July found that CEO Brian Cornell made 657 times more than his company's median employee ($20,581) last year. Compare this to the average Minnesota Fortune 500 CEO, who claims 101 times his employees.

Back in the mid-20th century, when unions represented more than a third of the U.S. workforce, the bottom 90 percent of earners took home 68 percent of the nation's income.

By 2012, just 10 percent of American workers were unionized, and the bottom 90 percent were getting less than half of the total income. The top 1 percent claimed 22 percent, the starkest ratio since 1928.

Workers hurt most are those without a degree or diploma. One study concluded they would receive 9 percent more if they unionized. Add it up across 1,700 Targets and a few hundred thousand employees, and you're talking real money.

Bernie Hesse, a retired lobbyist and organizer for UFCW, says most of his work concerning Target was "defensive"—trying to block tax breaks and subsidies this "ultimate welfare queen" demanded from state and local governments.

Organizing a store with a few hundred workers was a bridge too far, especially since Target tended to clip the most vociferous employees first.

Can't consumers exert pressure, as conscientious beer-swillers did this spring by switching from Grain Belt to Hamm's to support striking Teamsters?

Perhaps, but there's no Target alternative. Amazon, Aldi, Menards, Home Depot... Walmart? Some pay better than others, though they're all equally villainous on union-busting, maybe worse, Hesse says. Though "Walmart at least says 'Fuck you' to your face."

His solution is an unpopular one. "I think we should try to get away from materialism some, spend a little less chasing the latest gadget."

You could start by avoiding Target. At least until you hear it's stopped wedging its corporate weight against workers fighting for the right to look out for themselves—and each other. ☐

LADIES in the Jungle

Female-produced takes on classic works put women at center stage

LITTLE WOMEN PROMOTIONAL IMAGE

By JAY GABLER

“I’m not interested in ‘museum theater,’ where we’re just going to the museum of history and saying, ‘Look at exactly what kind of teacups they used!’” says Sarah Rasmussen, artistic director of the Jungle Theater. “To me, it’s more about carrying the spirit of a writer forward.”

That attitude explains why the Jungle Theater’s fall offerings promise to be back-to-back must-sees—despite the fact that, on the face of it, a Little Women adaptation and a Pride and Prejudice sequel may not sound particularly groundbreaking. In this case, they’re evidence that the Jungle is claiming a consequential position in the national new-play landscape.

The Jungle, which had never before commissioned a play, has enlisted three of the country’s most in-demand playwrights to create new scripts for a double whammy: a world-premiere commission (Little Women) followed by a world-premiere co-commission (The Wickhams: Christmas at Pemberley).

“I’m so inspired by Sarah,” says Kate Hamill, whose Sense and Sensibility was directed by Rasmussen at the Guthrie Theater in 2016. “We’re in this really new, exciting stage of much-overdue female leadership in the American theater, and Sarah is really one of the most exciting young leadership faces.”

Hoping to lock Hamill in for a Jungle premiere, Rasmussen asked if the playwright had anything in mind. “I said, ‘How about Little Women?’” recalls Hamill. “[Sarah] opened up her notebook, and Little Women was the first thing she had written on a list of things she was interested in.”

Later, they realized that 2018 would be the 150th anniversary of the book’s publication, with multiple new film and TV adaptations coming out as well. “The more the merrier,” says Hamill. “Mine is very unlikely to be anything like Greta Gerwig’s.”

Meanwhile, Rasmussen was also eagerly supporting The Wickhams. A sequel to Jane Austen’s Pride and Prejudice, the new play by Lauren Gunderson and Margot Melcon takes place in the same house, at the same time, as the duo’s earlier sequel, Miss Bennet: Christmas at Pemberley.

Although the Jungle didn’t premiere Miss Bennet, last year it mounted a production that was one of the most rapturously received shows of the season. Gunderson and Melcon say they credit Rasmussen with providing early feedback that helped them shape the script, which has become an instant holiday classic at theaters across the country.

Rasmussen “has such a great fondness for playwrights and their creative process,” says Christina Baldwin, who directed the Jungle’s Miss Bennet and will return to direct The Wickhams. “The feedback that she gives is always very spot-on, but it never is prescriptive.”

Baldwin will also play Marmee in Little Women, the newest offering from a playwright widely lauded for her fresh adaptations of literary standbys by authors ranging from William Thackeray to Jane Austen.

“I’m really interested in reclaiming the classics,” says Hamill. “I love the classics, and I feel like if you love something, you shouldn’t lock it away in some dark closet and never air it out. You should let it out in the sunlight. I’m really interested in reclaiming the classics—particularly from a feminist, female-centered perspective—and making them radically inclusive.”

That inclusivity requires diverse casting. “We actually rather insist upon it,” says Gunderson. While the Austen sequels highlight the novel’s feminist themes, they also examine issues of class and caste.

“Jane Austen is for everybody,” says Melcon. “I think there is a real opportunity [to] take some of these classic pieces and bring them back with a different perspective. You don’t have to be white, upper-class British to understand what’s going on.”

Hamill feels the same way about the relevance of Little Women. One way she’s re-examining Louisa May Alcott’s novel is by shining new light on one of the story’s most beloved characters. In the book, Jo declares, “I can’t get over my disappointment in not being a boy.” Hamill thinks that remark, and others in a similar vein, are telling.

“I increasingly fixated on Jo,” says Hamill, “a character who, in my opinion, is not even sure she wants to be a woman, someone who nowadays would have more paths: not necessarily stuck in this binary, heteronormative system.”

“We’re excited that C. Michael Menge is playing Jo,” says Rasmussen. “They go by the pronoun ‘they,’ they don’t subscribe to a binary, gendered representation. That feels very true to Jo.”

Gunderson is currently, aside from Shakespeare, the most-produced playwright in America. That tally comes from widespread productions of all her 20-plus scripts, but she and Melcon have seen quick interest in Miss Bennet, which premiered in 2016.

It’s not just the themes that are resonating with today’s theatergoers: It’s the writers’ knack for making the characters come alive in scripts written with close attention to their theatrical possibilities.

“They have a deep fondness and understanding of these iconic characters,” says Baldwin about Gunderson and Melcon. “You’re working with a classic, and you still feel like you have freedom to translate it to a contemporary audience.”

“We have fun with the stage directions,” says Gunderson, who explains that the playwrights aimed to create a story that “feels like you’re in the world of Jane Austen, but it also doesn’t exhaust your ear with sentences that go on for three pages.”

By way of example, Rasmussen says that one of her favorite Gunderson/Melcon stage directions is “Mr. Darcy cannot even.”

So, these plays will make you laugh. “I think one of the most radical things we can do onstage is let women be funny,” says Gunderson. “There’s a bit of mythology about who’s allowed to be funny and what kind of funny is okay. Women are not usually in that category. Part of what we’re doing is being funny in a modern way, but also reminding people that women have been funny for a long time.”

When she was re-reading Little Women, says Hamill, “[I thought], ‘God, it’s funny. It’s so funny!’ It’s got so much relationship-based humor. Austen certainly has that as well.”

Hamill, an actor who has appeared in productions of her own adaptations, has earned particular praise for her ability to evoke a vibrant spirit.

“It’s a highly theatrical revisiting of Little Women,” says Hamill about her new script. “It’s something that’s going to be highly relevant, speaking to where we are right now as a country, and it’s going to have a lot of surprises. Don’t go in thinking you know exactly what’s going to happen.”

Baldwin and her collaborators, who endearingly captured the flurry of familial activity in Miss Bennet, have their work cut out for them with The Wickhams. Actors including James Rodriguez, reprising his role of Mr. Darcy alongside other returning cast members from the Jungle’s Miss Bennet, have been delighting in the carefully laid details.

“Already,” says Rasmussen, “James has a bunch of notes about how Wickhams overlays with Bennet, because they actually happen at the same time but on different floors of the house. James is like the investigative dramaturg: ‘Okay, so this scene lines up with this scene!’ The playwrights are just delighted.”

“It’s a ‘side-quel,’” says Baldwin, coining a term. “It’s a fun and fulfilling piece of theater by itself, but you do have these little Easter eggs of connection that are fun to find.”

The Wickhams is premiering at the Jungle simultaneously with a production at Marin Theatre Company; the two theaters are in dialogue with each other and with the playwrights as they work the new piece out.

When they decided to write Miss Bennet, Gunderson and Melcon recognized that theaters need holiday fare that goes beyond A Christmas Carol. Nonetheless, says Rasmussen, the hit show “came from not a producer’s dream, but a playwrights’ impulse. What I love about both of those writers is, they are as feisty and optimistic and buoyant as that script is.”

Two plays in, the pair hint that they still may not be finished expanding the world of Pride and Prejudice. Gunderson asks, rhetorically, “Who can get enough of Mr. Darcy?”

“It’s exciting to think about being a theater that generates work that will go on to have a life elsewhere in the country, but that starts with the work of our incredible actors and designers and technicians in town,” says Rasmussen. “What I love about making a new play is that it really does take a village of people, and they forever affect that script.”

Lively as these plays are, even adventurous adapters have to draw the line somewhere. Hamill, who promises her Little Women will be a show “you can absolutely bring your kids to,” laughs when asked whether the March sisters might have indulged in some of the NSFW cross-stitching Hamill has been known to do in her spare time.

Referring to Jo’s favorite 19th-century expletive, Hamill says, “I imagine ‘Christopher Columbus!’ got in there somehow. That, to them, is pretty strong cursing.”

SOMA STUDIOS

Trademark Theater, run by two Tylers, is one of the Twin Cities' highest-profile new company launches in recent years. Tyler Michaels is an actor and director whose star has been rising since he was handed the Emerging Artist Ivey Award in 2014. Tyler Mills is a writer known for acclaimed Fringe shows. Though the company's debut production, last year's The Boy & Robin Hood, was underwhelming, this fall's production of Understood is a very different endeavor. Written by Mills and directed by Michaels, Understood comes billed as a surreal two-hander about a young married couple whose relationship has become strained. The disappearance of their dog sends them on a journey staged at Soma Studios, a new art space in the Grain Belt building. Michaels says in a statement that he hopes the production will help facilitate "difficult but necessary conversations" about personal and political differences as the midterm elections approach. It's a worthy, if daunting, aim. Find tickets and more info at www.trademarktheater.org. 79 13th Ave. NE, studio 212 at Grain Belt Studios, Minneapolis; 707-362-6700. October 3-28 —JAY GABLER

ANDY WEAVERLING

FOR COLORED GIRLS

PENUMBRA THEATRE

There could hardly be a better time, or a better venue, to revisit Ntozake Shange's Obie-winning 1974 play, which she called a "choreopoem." Twenty poems set to music and dance are performed by a multigenerational cast of women of color, drawing attention to issues of domestic violence and sexual assault while celebrating the healing energy of women's solidarity. For colored girls, which made Shange the second black woman (after Raisin in the Sun author Lorraine Hansberry) to have a play on Broadway, emerged from the same Black Arts Movement that produced Penumbra itself. Artistic director Sarah Bellamy and her father, Lou Bellamy, are co-directing; Ananya Chatterjea (Ananya Dance Theatre) choreographs. "The same rhetoric that is used to establish the Black Aesthetic," Shange said in 1979, "we must use to establish a women's aesthetic, which is to say that those parts of reality that are ours, those things about our bodies, the cycles of our lives that have been ignored for centuries in all castes and classes of our people, are to be dealt with now." 7:30 p.m. Wednesdays through Saturdays; 2 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays. $15-$40. 270 N. Kent St., St. Paul; 651-224-3180. September 18 to October 14 –JAY GABLER

TWIN CITIES HORROR FESTIVAL

SOUTHERN THEATER

Seven years in, the Twin Cities Horror Festival has become one of the most exciting—and, of course, terrifying—annual stage events on the calendar. Adventurous theater artists from Minnesota and beyond set up beneath the Southern's atmospherically age-worn proscenium to tell spine-chilling stories without the safety net that scary movies allow. This year's lineup looks particularly promising. Tom Reed, Fringe favorite and Brave New Workshop star, is delving into darkness with a show called Greenway. Toronto's Kairos Collective is presenting The Bathtub Girls, inspired by Canada's first case of sibling matricide. Rogues Gallery Arts, which pushed the fourth wall with last year's Intuition and the Mantis, are adapting Washington Irving's Legend of Sleepy Hollow. And Garrett Vollmer, a core Dangerous Productions actor, has written a play exploring toxic masculinity in small-town America. It's horror that strikes close to the show's title: Home. Times and ticket prices vary; visit www.tchrorrifestival.com for more info. 1420 S. Washington Ave., Minneapolis; 612-340-0155. October 25 through November 4 —JAY GABLER

PATIENTS THAT COME TO OUR PRACTICE FIND THAT MEDICAL MARIJUANA IS A “GATEWAY DRUG”

Dr. Jacob Mirman from Life Medical in St. Louis Park, offers evaluations and certifications for patients who may be eligible for the Minnesota Medical Cannabis Program in Minnesota.

...A GATEWAY TO VERY EFFECTIVE INTEGRATIVE MEDICINE!

AT LIFE MEDICAL WE HAVE OVER TWO YEARS OF EXPERIENCE CERTIFYING PATIENTS FOR MEDICAL CANNABIS UNDER THE MN LAW. DR. JACOB MIRMAN ANSWERS SOME OF THE MOST COMMONLY ASKED QUESTIONS BELOW:

Q: WHAT ISSUES IS MEDICAL CANNABIS EFFECTIVE FOR?

A: “I have never seen a single drug do so much good for patients with such a huge variety of medical issues,” says Dr. Jacob Mirman of Life Medical. “We have seen significant relief of multiple complaints with the patients we have certified for medical cannabis use. The state has a list of 13 qualifying conditions used in the certification for medical cannabis. A list of some of the top issues we have treated is below:”

- Chronic pain of any cause
- Sleep improvement is a very common benefit we see and it leads to other health improvements.
- Anxiety of any cause is relieved in most people. However, anxiety by itself is not a qualifying condition yet. It is often one of the symptoms associated with PTSD, autism spectrum disorders, end of life care, intractable pain, etc.
- Spasms from causes including MS and back injuries
- Multiple other conditions and complaints

Q: WHAT TYPES OF SIDE EFFECTS ARE ASSOCIATED WITH MEDICAL CANNABIS?

A: “Even when we see patients experience great relief from using medical cannabis, they have experienced minimal to no side effects.”

Q: HAVE PATIENTS BEEN ABLE TO STOP TAKING OTHER PHARMACEUTICALS ONCE THEY HAVE BEEN TAKING MEDICAL CANNABIS?

A: “Medical cannabis often times will replace one if not multiple prescriptions that patients were formerly taking. Patients with pain have been able to be weaned off opioid drugs and other pain killers and have been delighted in the fact that they also have been able to get rid of the side effects.”

Q: WHEN PATIENTS ARE USING MEDICAL CANNABIS ARE OTHER SIMULTANEOUS MODALITIES OF TREATMENT HELPFUL?

A: “It is incredibly rewarding to help patients with the benefits of cannabis. Cannabis provides excellent and sometimes remarkable symptom relief, but the true integrative care that we offer at Life Medical allows us to give more permanent and deeper improvements to their health.”

Q: ARE THERE PATIENTS WHO HAVE MADE REMARKABLE PROGRESS USING ONLY MEDICAL CANNABIS?

A: “We have seen people with rheumatoid arthritis who started on cannabis for pain relief improve to the point of being able to get off their steroids and immunosuppressants, and also they have stopped taking narcotics for pain.”

“We have also seen patients suffering from depression and anxiety make dramatic improvements using only cannabis. They have made huge positive changes to their lives including going out in public, exercising, losing weight and even getting their

We provide Medical Cannabis evaluations and certification

Dr. Jacob Mirman at Life Medical offers evaluations and certification for patients who may be eligible for the Minnesota Medical Cannabis Program in Minnesota. If you are looking for a marijuana doctor, Life Medical is a great clinic for you. We are conveniently located in St. Louis Park.

diabetes under control. It’s remarkable that medical cannabis can make such a difference in one patient’s life.”

Q: LIFE MEDICAL IS AN INTEGRATIVE MEDICAL CLINIC; HOW DOES THAT BENEFIT PATIENTS?

A: “We are an integrative clinic; this means that we employ both “conventional” and “complementary” modalities. Our comprehensive treatment plans are designed for effectiveness and efficiency so we can achieve the best results for our patients in the most economical and permanent way. Once permanent improvements are achieved, many patients can get off many of their medications, including medical cannabis.”

Q: WHAT ARE SOME EXAMPLES OF THE OTHER MODALITIES YOU MAY RECOMMEND FOR PATIENTS FOR PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS IN THEIR HEALTH?

A: “The approaches used to help our patients are very individualized. The modalities we employ are too numerous to list here, but here are a few examples:”

A PATIENT WHO IS OVERWEIGHT AND HAS SLEEP APNEA:

This patient will sleep better using medical cannabis. However we help them achieve a lasting improvement by encouraging them to lose weight using a combination of diet counseling and our NeuroResearch appetite suppression supplements. These solutions used together may get rid of sleep apnea permanently, and the patient may be able to stop taking cannabis as well.

A PATIENT EXPERIENCING MIGRAINES:

Migraine patients usually get huge relief from using medical cannabis. We also suggest chiropractic techniques to remove structural neck issues which may be causing the migraines. Another suggestion would be to take NeuroResearch supplements to improve the serotonin/dopamine balance, which is often very effective. Homeopathy can also be an excellent solution for long-term deeper improvement.

A PATIENT WITH KNEE PAIN DUE TO WEAR AND TEAR OR INJURY:

A patient with knee pain can get excellent pain relief with cannabis. Adding Low Level Laser Therapy, prolotherapy, acupuncture and some other modalities available at Life Medical can actually result in permanent knee improvements and can replace or postpone the need for joint replacement.

A PATIENT WITH PTSD:

Many PTSD patients get amazing benefits from cannabis, and most can stop taking their tranquilizers. In addition we suggest using psychological approaches such as EMDR or hypnotherapy or approaches such as homeopathy or Bach Flower Essences to help these patients achieve deeper improvements.

IN CONCLUSION, MANY PATIENTS COME IN SEEKING MEDICAL MARIJUANA CERTIFICATION, BUT WHEN THEY COME TO LIFE MEDICAL FOR OUR INTEGRATIVE APPROACH, THEY CAN ALSO TAKE ADVANTAGE OF A WIDE RANGE OF MODALITIES THAT CAN HELP THEM ACHIEVE DEEPER AND MORE PERMANENT IMPROVEMENTS.

THE HAUNTED BASEMENT 12

THE HAUNTED BASEMENT

The Haunted Basement retains a unique niche as the Halloween experience for discerning scare-seekers, those looking for something more creative than just masked movie villains jumping wearily from behind doors. For its second year in its post-Soap Factory space, the Basement is moving to a system where a new director helms the horrors each year. This year's dungeon master is Paul von Stoetzel, a filmmaker and theater artist who promises to take the popular October destination in a dystopian direction. "This year our intention is to truly fuck with those who have the sand to step into the basement," he says. "Our intent is inspire a true dread that patrons didn't know we could accomplish. We want patrons to physically enter a ghoulish world which they both are fascinated and subsequently horrified by the worst monsters imaginable—desperate human beings." In other words, don't expect last year's undead Betty Crocker to make a comeback. 18+. Schedule a time at HauntedBasement.org. $15-$40. 2010 E. MARIE AND ROSETTA

PARK SQUARE THEATRE

While the African American men who built the foundation for rock 'n' roll still don't get their proper due, many of their black female peers remain virtually unknown. Such is the case with Sister Rosetta Tharpe, a fierce gospel guitar slinger who was just posthumously inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. George Brant's Marie and Rosetta, having its regional premiere at Park Square Theatre under the direction of Frank Theatre's Wendy Knox, finds the pioneer in 1946, preparing for a tour with her new protégé Marie Knight. Gary Hines (Sounds of Blackness) serves as musical director for a production full of tunes ranging from spiritual to secular, as Tharpe unpacks her pioneering style and points the way toward the future that her musical descendants will inherit. 7:30 p.m. Thursdays through Saturdays; 2 p.m. Sundays. $20-$40. 20 W. Ananya Dance uses ancient arts to fight for justice

Shaatranga will be ADT's final piece in the "working women" series.

V. PAUL VIRTUCCIO

By SHEILA REGAN

Contemporary Indian dance company Ananya Dance Theatre has a new home where they're making pieces that are as political and community-engaged as they are entertaining. In recent months, the group has created works in response to local police shootings and danced during an immigration protest; this fall will mark the culmination of their five-piece series on women and the work they do around the world.

Their new space, the Shawngram Institute for Performance and Social Justice, is just off Lexington Parkway in the East Midway neighborhood of St. Paul. The windows look out onto a bustling University Avenue.

"When we are dancing [in this new space], there are people who just go by here and they dance around on the spot when they see us or when they hear the music," says artistic director Ananya Chatterjea.

The facility is also across the street from Gordon Parks High School and the High School for Recording Arts, a fact that is not lost on Chatterjea. "That, to me, is the biggest thing... [for students] to just know that dance is possible in their lives," she says. "That children on their way back home from school would be like, 'Oh, maybe this is something I can do.'"

Opening a center that combines dance, activism, and community has been a dream of Chatterjea's for quite some time. The dream became reality at the end of May during a week where scholars, artists, activists, and healers from all over the world were in town for a summit that Chatterjea had organized at the University of Minnesota, where she's a professor. Participants convened at Shawngram for a blessing ceremony to inaugurate the space.

"We began with blessings from Dakota and Anishinaabe activists," she says, adding that spiritual leaders from other communities also gave blessings of peace and love. These offerings still sit on an altar in the building; there are shells and a lei from Hawaii, an elephant from a Hmong spiritual leader, and a poem by artist Marcus Young.

Programming began promptly after. This summer, ADT offered an intensive course in which dancers, scholars, and folks from the community investigated the intersections of dance and social justice. The three-week program took place for three hours a day, five days a week; participants took dance technique classes and learned pieces from ADT's repertoire. Teaching artists not only taught movement but shared the company's process of integrating social justice goals with dance.

The program was open to all, regardless of skill level or experience. Crystal Brown signed up shortly after her mother's death. Her background is in social work, and she had never taken a dance class before. However, she didn't find the experience to be overwhelming—she found it to be cathartic. "I know that dance helps you get trauma out of your body," she says. "It's not just important, it's needed. It is something that should be in every school."

It's never just about dance for artistic associate Kealoha Ferreira, who taught classes at the summer intensive. "It's as much about the dance as it is about developing community," Ferreira says. When news broke during a class session that Minneapolis police had fatally shot Thurman Blevins, it fueled conversation. The dancers created a piece in response, which they performed at the Indigenous Roots Cultural Center right before a protest march for reuniting families at the border.

For now, the institute is the home base for ADT as they prepare for their fall concert at the O'Shaughnessy, which will be followed by an international tour that includes visits to Bethlehem, Delhi, and cities around the U.S. They will also host a national conference, along with Arts in a Changing America and Pangea World Theater, highlighting national and local artists of color doing social justice-based work.

Chatterjea hopes that the institute can be a resource not only for ADT but for other groups that are committed to social justice. She also plans to host an event featuring some of the dance artists who have worked with ADT and are now finding their way as independent artists.

As a choreographer, mentor, and educator, Chatterjea has nurtured a number of emerging and established dance artists in town.

"I love being able to be part of a bigger movement," says Chatterjea. "I didn't want to be a solo artist, because that's boring to me. I love being amidst people, amidst a movement."

Former ADT member Chitra Vairavan has recently been making waves as a dance maker in her own right. She won a SAGE Award in 2015, was a McKnight Fellow in 2016, and is currently a Naked Stages Fellow. She believes her less-than-traditional explorations into choreography and performance were critical to her professional development.

"My introduction to the contemporary dance world was not through any dance program or institutional training," says Vairavan. Rather, she found her voice as an artist through ADT's collective of intergenerational female artists of color. "It's the space that empowered me," she says.

With Yorchha, ADT's unique approach to dance, Chatterjea has essentially created a new movement vocabulary. Yorchha blends the classical Indian dance form Odissi with yoga and the martial art form Chhau.

It all came about when she was training as a dancer in India, learning Odissi in her guru's space. At the bus stop where she'd wait to go home, she would often see things like demonstrations, women's groups organizing, and street theater. "How do I bring these things together?" she thought.

When Chatterjea moved to the United States, she set out to create a contemporary form that came from her South Asian roots. Chhau's strength and broad torso movements extend the Odissi form, which gives the latter a sense of empowerment.

However, it took some time to expand movement into the political activism realm.

"Social justice-based choreography is something I literally had to teach myself," Chatterjea says. "I learned about staging, I learned about lighting, I learned about which stories to juxtapose and how to create a transition from one story to another. I came to those choreographic tools because of my commitment to social justice."

This fall at the O'Shaughnessy, ADT will present Shaatranga: Women Weaving Worlds, the final piece in a quintet focused on the work women do around the world. The series came out of the company's research into how women resist violence and seek justice, often working in ways that aren't seen or acknowledged.

In Shaatranga, Chatterjea questions how women around the world can show up for each other. The performance includes shipwrecks, golden deer, blue jeans, and pre-colonial trade routes, using metaphors and history to investigate the root of capitalism, and how over centuries it has become a drug that both entices and destroys.

Chatterjea says this fall's show will be the last time she presents anything from the series. She plans on shifting to single works in the future, as she wants to be able to be in the moment, responding to current events.

"What I really need as an artist is to be present in my daily life," Chatterjea says. "To respond, to offer a different vision, to offer a different take. These are the documents of our time, this is how dance is part of history, because it makes its own statement." LF

CHOREOGRAPHERS' EVENING 2018

WALKER ART CENTER

The lineup for this perennial favorite invariably reflects the sensibilities of the curator. This year she's Pramila Vasudevan, a 2017 Guggenheim Fellow and the founding artistic director of Aniccha Arts, whose technologically forward, socially conscious, and often site-specific work is based in classical and contemporary Indian dance forms. Whom will she select? And how will they confront, embrace, or reinvent the Walker's McGuire Theater? Now in its 46th year, this annual event is always full of surprises, whether the choreographers are established or emerging. 7 and 9:30 p.m. $25. 725 Vineland Place, Minneapolis; 612-375-7600. November 24 — CAMILLE LEFEVRE

SARAH MICHELSON: OCTOBER2018/\

WALKER ART CENTER

Choreographer Sarah Michelson returns to the Walker Art Center with... well, she's not telling. Michelson's long relationship with the Walker, which has included landmark commissioned works Daylight (2005), Devotion (2011), and tournamento (2015), continues with October2018/. Previous dances have showcased severe formality and vigorous athleticism, ordeals, endurance, and encyclopedic explorations of things physical, spiritual, and architectural. They've been performed by her stellar group of dancers, as well as incorporated community members. While secrecy about what she's making has become her trademark in the various museums and theaters where she's performed nationwide (including the Whitney and the Museum of Modern Art in New York), a little sleuthing might offer up some clues. The performances take place at 5:30 in the Walker's Cargill Lounge, where west-facing floor-to-ceiling windows offer a dramatic vista of the Walker campus. So, a sunset may be involved. And the audience may move around. Whatever transpires, it's worth your time to experience this sui generis artist on her own terms. 5:30 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. $5. 725 Vineland Place, Minneapolis; 612-375-7600. October 19-21 — LINDA SHAPIRO

BOBBY ROGERS

MORGAN THORSON AND ALAN SPARHAWK (LOW): PUBLIC LOVE

WALKER ART CENTER

One reviewer of Morgan Thorson's prior collaboration with Low, the 2009 Heaven, referred to the piece as an "audio-choreographed work." That's an apt, if a bit obtuse, description of an absorbing dance composed of elemental and elegant movement set to the slow-core music of Duluth band Low. This time, dancers Jessica Cressey, Non Edwards, Allie Hankins, Sam Johnson, Alanna Morris-Van Tassel, and Valerie Oliveira will be on stage with Sparhawk, merging movement and music in a deep, tactile dive toward what touch means in a culture that values power and control. 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. $28. 725 Vineland Place, Minneapolis; 612-375-7600. December 6-8 — CAMILLE LEFEVRE

NORTHROP

Local ballet lovers often feel starved for ballets by the incomparable George Balanchine, especially when performed to live music. They and everyone else will get both when the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra joins the feisty Pittsburgh Ballet Theatre for a concert of three works to music by Mozart. Balanchine's "Divertimento No. 15," a heady combo of neoclassical idealism and sensual gaiety, is the kind of sublime ballet that critics call "celestial" and "majestic." By contrast, two ballets by Czech choreographer Jiří Kylián present quite a different worldview. Kylián has said, "Our bodies are 275 hinges or joints, so the combination of what you can do with them is endless." His "Petite Mort" integrates athletic men wielding fencing foils, women defiantly stepping out of baroque

MEREDITH MONK & VOCAL ENSEMBLE: CELLULAR SONGS

WALKER ART CENTER

Meredith Monk has long been uncategorizable. A vocalist, composer, choreographer, theater artist, and mover, she's most of all a visionary whose works at once transport us to a primal past and an irrepressible future. In large-scale theater piece, her first in more than a decade, she and her chorus of women move and sing to a film and video installation in an exploration of environmental devastation and resilience. While the work's essence lies in the details, and Monk's approach to exploring the microscopic in her singular way, the overall experience will be cosmic: aural, kinetic, and mind-blowingly transformative. 8 p.m. Thursday through Saturday. $28. 725 Vineland Place, Minneapolis; 612-375-7600. October 4-6 — CAMILLE LEFEVRE

TRACY (GOLD CIRCLE)

SARA CWYNAR: IMAGE MODEL MUSE

MINNEAPOLIS INSTITUTE OF ART

Simulation, simulacra, conceptualism, collage, ephemera, permanence, and gaze. These are just some aspects of Sara Cwynar's work, with which theorists are having a field day. But the artist's digital take on popular culture and social media, as portrayed in her photography and filmmaking, is intriguing to anyone alive in today's material world. The Canadian-born, Brooklyn-based artist investigates contemporary concepts and the construction of beauty with a gimlet eye in the 11 photographs from the artist's ongoing Tracy series. This being Cwynar's first U.S. exhibition, the Mia show also includes three of the artist's most recent films—Soft Film (2016), Rose Gold (2017), and Cover Girl (2018)—which explore consumerism, visual culture, value, disposability, and design in layered exposé. Free. 2400 Third Ave. S., Minneapolis; 888-642-2787. September 14 through January 20, 2019 —CAMILLE LEFEVRE

ARTCRANK MSP 2018

IDS CENTER

Since 2012, ARTCRANK has been the place to be for people who love art, people who love bikes, and, of course, the many people who love both. Run by local husband-and-wife team Charles Youel and Nicki McCracken, the one-day event features handmade, bicycle-inspired posters, with limited-edition prints available for purchase. It's an art show, it's a bike community get-together, and there's usually plenty of beer to keep things interesting. The incomparable Adam Turman will return once again with his much-loved design aesthetic, along with over 40 artists, illustrators, designers, and creatives who all bring their unique takes on finding the cycle sublime. Find more details at www.artcrank.com. 4 to 10 p.m. Free. 80 S. Eighth St., Minneapolis. October 13 — SHEILA REGAN

KINNGAIT STUDIOS: PRINTMAKING IN THE ARCTIC CIRCLE

HIGHPOINT CENTER FOR PRINTMAKING

Kinngait Studios, part of the West Baffin cooperative that opened in Nunavut, Canada, in 1959, supports Native artists interested in exploring the aesthetic possibilities of printmaking. Over the past 70 years, those artists' work—redolent with nature's most fantastical and magical qualities—have been embraced by collectors around the globe. In this singular exhibition, artists depict a wide range of imagery drawn from traditional Inuit practices, contemporary subject matter, and Inuit lore. Among the creatives is Kananginak Pootoogook, the first Inuit artist to be included in the Venice Biennale (2017). Most traditional printmaking techniques are used at Kinngait Studios, but the printers are known for the stonecut method using native soapstone. There will be an opening reception on Friday, October 19, from 6:30 to 9 p.m. 912 W. Lake St., Minneapolis; 612-871-1326. October 19 through November 17 — CAMILLE LEFEVRE

MARIO GARCÍA TORRES: ILLUSION BROUGHT ME HERE

WALKER ART CENTER

This will be the first U.S. survey of Mexico City-based conceptual artist Mario García Torres. The exhibition, curated by the Walker's Vincenzo de Bellis with curatorial fellow Fabian Leyva-Barragan, will not only look at two decades' worth of the artist's work, but will also feature two new installations made just for the Walker. Torres will also perform three monologues over the course of the run, mining personal responses and reactions to contemporary issues. With video, installation, photography, and sculpture, the show will offer a glimpse at Torres' compelling practice of looking at the work of conceptual artists of past generations. Through research and his own methods of fictionalized re-creation, Torres will offer plenty to chew over, especially in the context of the Walker Art Center, an institution that has supported and presented pieces by many of the artists that Torres draws inspiration from. 725 Vineland Place, Minneapolis; 612-375-7600. October 25 through February 17, 2019 —SHEILA REGAN

EGYPT'S SUNKEN CITIES

MINNEAPOLIS INSTITUTE OF ART

A blockbuster exhibition of ancient artifacts that were almost lost forever makes its way to the Minneapolis Institute of Art as it tours around the world. "Egypt's Sunken Cities" features more than 250 works of art that were discovered by underwater archaeologist Franck Goddio while exploring the Aboukir Bay near the city of Alexandria. Goddio's team of archaeologists, Egyptologists, historians, geologists, geophysicists, and computer engineers unearthed (or "unwatered" in this case) incredible sculptures and artifacts from the lost cities of Thonis-Heracleion and Canopus, once thriving locations of the ancient world. The monumental statues—including jewelry, ceramics, and religious images carved in stone—were submerged in water around 800 C.E. until their rediscovery in 2000. Goddio will give lectures at Mia on October 28 and November 1, recounting the fascinating adventure of excavating the ancient sites. The exhibition features artifacts from museums in Cairo and Alexandria. $20. 2400 Third Ave. S., Minneapolis; 888-642-2787. November 4 through April 14, 2019 —SHEILA REGAN

THE INTERNET

VARSITY THEATER

In the early 2010s, Los Angeles alt-R&B crew the Internet was a curious offshoot of the wildly inventive, miscreant rap collective Odd Future. By 2015's supremely chill, Grammy-nominated Ego Death, it was clear the band was the real deal. Their sound has increasingly become the product of thorough collaboration and democracy, each member rightfully earning songwriting credits. Singer Syd—a rising queer icon whose solo Fin was one of last year's best R&B albums, and who recently cameoed in Drake's "Nice for What" video—may be the group's star, but guitarist Steve Lacy, keyboardist Matt Martians, and bassist Patrick Paige II also released well-received solo records ahead of the band's fourth and best album, this July's Hive Mind. Where Ego Death enlisted more help from outside collaborators like Janelle Monáe and Tyler, the Creator, the band's core lineup crystallizes on the new album, highlighted by songs like the sneaky funk earworm "La Di Da." 15+. 7:30 p.m. $31.50-$85. 1308 Fourth St. SE, Minneapolis; 612-217-7701. October 17 — MICHAEL MADDEN

FLORENCE + THE MACHINE

TARGET CENTER

London band Florence + the Machine are responsible for some of the grandest chamber-pop moments of the past decade—massive, cathartic rushes of skyward vocals, strings, and other orchestration. But following 2015's How Big, How Blue, How Beautiful, singer Florence Welch and co.'s fourth album, June's High as Hope, is easily their quietest LP yet, extending HBHBHB's toned-down second half as it counts more on Welch's emotive singing and negative space. Over the course of the album's 10 songs, a lot does happen—jazz savior Kamasi Washington shows up to play saxophone and arrange horns on three songs, for example, and there are plenty of strings—but Welch, already known as an earnest lyricist, gets powerfully raw, direct, and personal as she contemplates vices, voids, and her individual pursuit of happiness. With Perfume Genius. 7 p.m. $39.50-$99.50. 600 First Ave. N., Minneapolis; 612-673-1300. October 20 —MICHAEL MADDEN & Restaurant, 1010 Nicollet Mall, Minneapolis; 612-332-1010.

KALI UCHIS

FIRST AVENUE

Kali Uchis, a Colombian-American singer who frequently draws comparisons to giants like Billie Holiday and Amy Winehouse, has truly emerged in 2018. The 25-year-old's rise from teenage homelessness to the cusp of pop stardom owes to her 2015 EP Por Vida, her assist on Canadian R&B newcomer Daniel Caesar's Grammy-nominated "Got You" (among other collaborations with the likes of Gorillaz and Tyler, the Creator), and, most recently, her long-awaited debut album. On April's surreal, swirling Isolation, Uchis navigates lo-fi pop, neo-soul, reggaeton, bossa nova, and more, with occasional Spanish-language singing and contributions from Gorillaz mastermind Damon Albarn, Tame Impala leader Kevin Parker, and funk icon Bootsy Collins. But if it sounds like it consists of disparate pieces, it's a remarkably smooth, well-sequenced album all the way through. MITSKI

FIRST AVENUE

Two years ago, with her breakthrough album, Puberty 2, and its standout single “Your Best American Girl,” Mitski Miyawaki emerged as an indie-rock revelation, an evocatively melancholy new voice in a genre increasingly viewed as stagnant. None other than Iggy Pop would later call her “probably the most advanced American songwriter that I know.” For her new, fifth album, August’s Be the Cowboy, Mitski builds on the lo-fi fuzz of her preceding work with glimmering synths and chamber-pop instrumentation, and she eschews the previous album’s aching introspection in favor of fiction and narrative. (There’s a song called “Me and My Husband”; Mitski isn’t married.) But even with those alterations, her songs still feel deeply honest and intimate. They’re also sneakily catchy, suggesting the already masterful songwriter is getting even better all-around. With Overcoats. 18+. 8 p.m. $20/$22. 701 First Ave. N., Minneapolis; 612-338-8388. October 26 —MICHAEL MADDEN

KAMASI WASHINGTON

PALACE THEATRE

After a relatively low-key decade and a half working in sideman capacities for artists ranging from Ryan Adams to Snoop Dogg, Kamasi Washington jolted normally jazz-averse listeners awake with 2015's The Epic, a triple album that led to the Los Angeles tenor saxophonist, bandleader, and composer being compared to spiritual-jazz greats of the late '60s and early '70s. Washington's ambition hasn't wavered in the slightest. Following last year's Harmony of Difference EP, plus contributions to records by Kendrick Lamar and Run the Jewels, he and his usual supporting cast (including trombonist Ryan Porter, bassist Miles Mosley, and drummer Ronald Bruner Jr.) delivered another colossal statement with the two-and-a-half-hour Heaven and Earth. It's all made Washington the obvious leader of contemporary jazz and, almost exactly a year after his excellent First Avenue show, the reopened Palace Theatre's second-ever jazz headliner. MARY ELLEN FRAME

MARY MOORE EASTER

WISDOM WAYS

Mary Moore Easter's collection of poetry The Body of the World is about her life as an African American woman, dancer, and writer. Her visceral reading at the Loft last March demonstrated that poetry could rock. This time out, she'll read the 15 linked sonnets that grew out of her overwhelming experience seeing the battalions of the 2,000-year-old warrior sculptures unearthed in Xian, China. Sculpted by thousands of enslaved artists to protect the Emperor Qin Shi Huang after death, the underground army became even more of a symbol of tyranny when the artists who worked on the project were murdered to protect the tomb's location. But still, "the power of art felt so much greater than the power of dominion," she says. The reading will be followed by a discussion and reception. 7 p.m. Free; RSVP at 651-696-2788. 1890 Randolph Ave., St. Paul. September 27 —LINDA SHAPIRO

JULIE SCHUMACHER

MAGERS & QUINN

The English department at the fictional Payne University is near death in Julie Schumacher's new book, The Shakespeare Requirement. The novel revives the cantankerous Professor Fitger, who debuted in Schumacher's 2014 novel, Dear Committee Members, a tome that made her the first woman ever awarded the Thurber Prize for American Humor. But unlike that story, which used first-person point of view and was written in the form of recommendation letters, The Shakespeare Requirement invites readers to experience academia—and its incessant red tape—from multiple perspectives, including faculty, students, and the higher-ups. The English department facilities make for quite the character as well, and are clearly inspired by the University of Minnesota, where Schumacher has taught for two decades. A book about how the English faculty struggle to agree on a "statement of vision" before the well-endowed econ department takes over what's left of their budget and office space might not sound riveting, but thanks to Schumacher's artistry, you'll be amused and entertained all the way through. 7 p.m. Free. 3038 Hennepin Ave. S., Minneapolis; 612-822-4611. September 27 —ERICA RIVERA

VICTORIA STEVENS

TALKING VOLUMES: REBECCA TRAISTER

FITZGERALD THEATER

Rebecca Traister, the whip-smart author of All the Single Ladies (2016) and Big Girls Don't Cry (2010), now turns her attention to the revolutionary power of women's anger in Good and Mad. In the United States, female and male ire are not interpreted equally; even in the same gender group, race and socio-economic status determine who gets heard. Traister examines how privilege incites anger and infighting among women, the ways women are silenced and silence themselves, the role of profanity in the expression of indignation, and why fury is an asset for men (see Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders, both of whom leveraged that emotion in the last presidential election), yet is seen as a liability for women. In demonstrating our country's rageful history, Traister pulls from a long line of female firebrands—from Abigail Adams and Shirley Chisholm to Andrea Dworkin and Samantha Bee—and addresses the role of anger in modern movements like Occupy, Black Lives Matter, and #MeToo. It's all part of an awakening and a call to action. "Being mad is American," she writes. "Don't ever let them talk you out of being mad again." 7 p.m. $23-$50. 10 E. Exchange St., St. Paul; 651-290-1200.

TWIN CITIES BOOK FESTIVAL

MINNESOTA STATE FAIRGROUNDS

Every fall, thousands of book lovers descend on the Minnesota State Fairgrounds to gather around the written word and the authors who've mastered it, and to stock up on new reads. Among the big-name authors flying in for the 18th annual festival are award-winning Brit Geoff Dyer; Steve Almond, whose latest book, Bad Stories: What the Hell Just Happened To Our Country, attributes the outcome of the 2016 presidential election to erroneous narratives we've told ourselves; and Kenya native Ngũgĩ wa Thiong'o, whose memoir, Wrestling with the Devil, recounts the year he spent in jail as a political prisoner. Many children's and young adult authors will be in attendance, too, like Hamline professor Sheila O'Connor and janitor-turned-writer Daniel Bernstrom. Get your books signed at the "morning mingle" before a full day of author presentations and children's programming—all for free. Find more info at www.raintaxi.com. 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Free. 1265 Snelling Ave. N., St. Paul; 651-288-4400. October 13 —ERICA RIVERA

ALMA GUZMAN

BY EMILY CASSEL

It's on my second visit to Misfit Coffee that I start to suspect I'm doing something wrong.

Ordering goes easily enough. I opt for the hyper-caFFEinated Horchata Del Noche even though it's mañana, because I need its punch-the-hangover-right-out-of-ya combination of horchata, espresso, and nitro cold brew. Finding a seat's no problem, either; it's busy, but a few of the angular barstools, their backs shaped like copper stealth bombers, are up for grabs.

Only when I slide my laptop from my backpack do I realize I might be making a mistake. No one else has a computer out.

Misfit doesn't look or function like almost any other coffee shop in the Twin Cities. More and more, the spaces serving your morning brew are as sharp and shiny as the MacBooks lining their tabletops—all blinding white walls and high ceilings and honeycomb tile.

Not here. Especially after dark—Misfit's open until 10 p.m. daily—it feels more like a bar than a cafe, right down to the floorplan: a corridor-like layout with the bar to the left, a line of two-top tables on your right. Strips of neon line the back wall and dangle horizontally throughout the room; low red light radiates from beneath the bar. The bathroom? We won't spoil that for you. You really should see it yourself. And the music is loud—not nightclub-loud, but definitely not cafe-quiet. Close your eyes, and you might think you were in a coffee-scented record shop, or a Forever 21 with a much better playlist.

"We don't want to be a study spot—every other coffee shop is quiet," Misfit founder and owner Marcus Parkansky tells me plainly when I pull up a seat at the concrete counter a few days later (this time sans computer).

Since opening on the corner of 24th Street and Lyndale Avenue early last month, his goal has been simple: provide a place for people to connect to one another. And counterintuitively, it can be harder to do that when there's less noise. You feel like your conversation is disrupting those nearby, or that the tables around you can hear your every word. So Parkansky takes a page from the bar book and turns up the volume: "Then everybody has to talk a little bit louder, everyone feels a little freer to share their voice. Yeah," he grins, "we're going to play music a little bit louder than we maybe should."

FUN WITH FOAM

Mixing oddball drinks with serious style, Misfit Coffee fits right in on Lyndale Avenue

Even in a city with so many coffee shops doing so many different things, that makes Misfit live up to its name. And we haven't even gotten to the weird-ass drinks yet.

Ever combined cola with your coffee? Misfit does: The Spro-Da-Pop is a mix of Mexican Coke and espresso that team up to create a delightfully fizzy (if strange) sugar and caffeine kick. It sounds sort of abominable on paper, something a delirious college student would make to keep the party going after the vodka and Red Bull ran out. Unfortunately, the Spro-Da-Pop is good. I almost wish it was less enjoyable, because something I absolutely don't need is an excuse to drink Coke at 8 in the morning. At least I'm not alone: Spro-Da's been on the Misfit menu since it opened as a mobile coffee truck three years ago. One die-hard drinker likes them so much that once, when Parkansky's distributor was out of Mexican Coke, he brought them a 24-pack.

That's not even the zaniest-sounding-but-actually-good drink that might just lower your skeptically arched eyebrows. There's the refreshing Misfit Palmer, a Sure!—until you realize the subtle kick comes from jalapeño and serrano peppers. Like coffee beans with fruitier notes? Perhaps you'll enjoy the Coco-Nana Cold Brew, which marries actual banana, dark chocolate, sea salt, and more to create a sweet sort-of smoothie.

though—act fast if you want to try a Sas-safras Blast (heavy whipping cream, cold brew concentrate, horchata, nitro cold brew, root beer).

If that's not enough, Parkansky's really pulling to get a liquor license, potentially extending those late-night hours past 10. Beer and wine shouldn't be an issue, but he wants to go all-out: They're essentially making booze-free cocktails as it is, and these weirdo concoctions would really work well with a splash of something stronger. (If you're conflicted about Spro-Da-Pop now, imagine how you'll feel should liquor enter the mix.)

Is it a little gimmicky? I mean, maybe. But it's a good gimmick. And for it to work, the espresso has to be on point; the coffee brewed to perfection.

You might not like everything. Parkansky gets that.

"If you make a face—and we know the face you're making—we will happily make you something else," he laughs. "But if you come in here like, 'Should I get a latte?' I'll be like, 'Please don't.' This is your time to get something you can't get anywhere else."

To be clear, you can get a regular-ass latte, just as there's no espresso police stopping you from commandeering a table and connecting to the wi-fi. I've returned to Misfit since accompanied by only my computer, happily fueling my keyboard-clacking with a Spoonbridge Cherry Chai or Guava Green Tea. I've seen others doing the same.

But if you find yourself with a work-free afternoon? Snag a counter seat, order a bizarre beverage, and start talking to one of the perennially chatty baristas.

"What we appreciate as much as good coffee is having good people around and having good personalities and good experiences and conversations—making people feel like they're worth something when they come in," Parkansky says. "We're just here to have a good time." ☐

THE ST. PAUL-BASED INVENTOR OF GO-GURT TELLS THE DRAMATIC STORY OF HIS TOTALLY TUBULAR IDEA

Stephen Kaufman swirled some mixed berry Go-Gurt around in his mouth, the way a wine connoisseur might a vintage Cabernet.

"Tastes a little artificial," he concluded. "But it's very creamy. It's made to be eaten this way; you just kind of suck it out of the top. Very nice texture."

He should know—he's the one who invented it. Back when he was a food scientist at General Mills in the late '80s, Kaufman—who shares my surname and my father's full name, though we're not related and the two men have never met—and his colleague Jim McGuire created the original idea and recipe for Go-Gurt. So when I met with him in St. Paul a few weeks ago, of course I had to offer him a tube.

(When he tore off the top, the tab didn't rip all the way—the classic school lunchroom dilemma. But maybe it's actually better when the top is left hanging on, he suggested, "so you're not taking this little tab and throwing it off into the environment.")

That creamy texture he pointed out? It wasn't what he and McGuire were initially going for. Back in the '80s, they were tossing around new products to pitch to the General Mills marketing team. "One of us had the idea, why don't we put the yogurt in a Mr. Freeze [ice pop] tube? Just a different container," Kaufman said.

With his food science training, he started trying to concoct a firmer yogurt. He and McGuire didn't want runny yogurt in a floppy tube; they wanted it to stand straight up, like an ice pop. But this proved harder than expected, so Kaufman pivoted from his original plan and tinkered with the yogurt-making process itself, until he created a new ultra-creamy, ultra-slurpable yogurt recipe.

Initial market-research tests came back lukewarm. Marketing eventually approved the idea, but the engineering department hated it, Kaufman recalled, because they'd invested so much time and money into perfecting yogurt in cups and thought tubular pouches would be impossible.

"As the meetings went on, they got more and more dug in against it," he said. "And at the same time, because I'm a stubborn German, of course, I was like, 'No, I think we can figure this out.'"

FOOD

That's when it hit him: Hotels provide shampoo and other toiletries in pouches. Why couldn't a personal-care product machine make containers for yogurt, too?

Kaufman went rogue. He found a machine he could rent and enlisted McGuire's help to whip up 500 pounds of his yogurt recipe, haul it over in the back of his pickup, and make a bunch of prototypes. At the next meeting, it was time for his big move.

"Engineering is just like, 'Impossible! Can't do! Gotta kill it!'" Kaufman said. "They've got their stake, ready to drive it into the vampire's heart." So he walked over to the cooler in the conference room, took out the box of tubes he'd made—and dumped them out in front of everyone. Little pouches of yogurt scattered across the table, flying into people's laps, flopping onto the floor.

"I go, 'See! You can put yogurt in pouches!'" he said. "It was dramatic, but that was my thing at that point. So then Engineering was cursed with knowledge that there was a machine that could make these things."

Despite that, Go-Gurt was put on hold because it still didn't have the preliminary sales numbers General Mills required to launch new products, Kaufman said. He left the company in 1992, so he doesn't know what other changes took place before Go-Gurt launched in 1998, about a decade after his conference-room stunt. (General Mills declined City Pages' request to speak with current employees who worked there at the time, including McGuire.)

Go-Gurt is now a huge success: Over 1 billion tubes of it were sold in 2017 alone, according to General Mills. Kaufman said he's surprised at just how popular the portable yogurt turned out to be—that his watchful eye for trends and stubborn dedication to his ideas worked out in the end.

Today, he says, the food innovation trends he's tracking are nothing like they were in the 1980s. The internet and social media have completely disrupted who controls the messages we receive about food, which means companies can be hugely profitable selling to a small subset of people, instead of trying to make it on the mass market. All you need now is a good idea, not necessarily a giant corporation backing you.

But if he were still in the new-product ideation game in today's landscape, he said, he'd take a similar creative approach.

"I would start looking for... an area that's growing that needs a little different twist," he said. "Like with Go-Gurt, it was just a container change. I didn't have to invent yogurt, I just stuck it in a different container." —JARED KAUFMAN

LITTLE WOMEN

JUNGLE THEATER

Little Women continues to capture the zeitgeist some 150 years later. Its progressive sensibility is consistent with that of the novel's author, Louisa May Alcott, whose lifelong questioning of gender roles is key to the story's enduring popularity. Acclaimed playwright Kate Hamill will debut her adaptation of Little Women as the opening production for the Jungle Theater's new season. This highly anticipated premiere, commissioned by the company, also qualifies as a reunion between Hamill and director Sarah Rasmussen (also the Jungle's artistic director), a duo who previously collaborated on the Guthrie Theater's popular staging of Sense and Sensibility. Imbuing Alcott's work with appropriately modern touches, the production follows the tale of four sisters coping with their limited future prospects amid the Civil War. The show is headlined by such esteemed talents as Christina Baldwin, Wendy Lehr, and Jim Lichtscheidl, and is in previews September 12-14, 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Sundays; 2 p.m. Sundays. $40-$50; $15 previews. 2951 Lyndale Ave. S., Minneapolis; 612-822-7063. Through October 21 —BRAD RICHASON

ZAMYA THEATER PROJECT

MINNEAPOLIS CENTRAL LIBRARY

Housed in the St. Stephen's Human Services Building, zAmya Theater Project is made up of artists who have been or currently are struggling with homelessness. This week, the group will celebrate the culmination of its residency at Minneapolis Central Library with a performance. Second Chance was created through workshops conducted at the library, where a cast collaborated with a team of professional theater artists, including playwright Carlyle Brown, choreographer Leah Nelson, and director Maren Ward. With short scenes, songs, humor, and spoken word, the piece explores what it means to get a second chance in life. See it this week at the amphitheater outside. Noon Wednesday and Thursday; 5 pm. RYAN HAMILTON

ACME COMEDY CO.

Ryan Hamilton is, to borrow an expression from fellow comedian Jackie Kashian, one of the golden retrievers of comedy: Everyone's always glad to see him. That is even truer these days in what can sometimes be a toxic climate. "I like people to come out of the show feeling good no matter what we talk about," he says. That usually involves the odd and silly things that happen to him on a day-to-day basis. "I don't know if that's interesting or not, but I think it's funny. I try to be somewhat broad, and I enjoy that. I like comedy that's all over the spectrum."

Lately, he's been going old-school. "I've been on a kick where I'm reading physical newspapers," he says. "I just like to pick up a newspaper, and that's my go-to airplane read now. I find I retain more and I learn more than watching cable news or scrolling through headlines on my phone. I'm trying to stay informed and be a good citizen." Hamilton's profile has

ILIZA: ELDER MILLENNIAL

PANTAGES THEATRE

Every time Iliza (she dropped her last name, Shlesinger, on stage) comes to town, it seems like she’s had a major life change, and made another major professional leap. This year is no different, as the comedian recently got married and released her brand-new Netflix special, Elder Millennial. Last November, she also put out her first book, Girl Logic: The Genius of Absurdity, featuring a number of essays on her approach to friendship and relationships. Her material is a battle cry for anyone, male or female, who grew up in the late ’90s and early 2000s, but she also shares her own personal observations on getting older, maturing in relationships, and navigating settling down as a newly married person. Whether you’ve laughed until you cried at her specials like War Paint and Freezing Hot, or you remember her from her Last Comic Standing days, Iliza’s confidence, self-awareness, and dashes of millennial goofiness are still on full display. 7 and 10 p.m. $38-$103. 710 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis; 612-339-7007. —PATRICK STRAIT

AMERICAN SWEDISH INSTITUTE

Currently on display at the American Swedish Institute, the colorful universe created by Swedish textile designer and entrepreneur Gudrun Sjödén is further celebrated during this fall party. Sjödén’s nature-inspired designs, chromatic color palettes, organic materials, and woman-centered values are amplified with the vibrant, vivacious sounds of the Fiamma Disco Queens, Tacky Annie, and Mina Moore. Put on your dancin’ shoes when the Hennepin County Disco Authority takes to the lawn. Color experiments and live mural painting beg for participation. As always, the fashion, the food, and the fun will combine to create a memorable night of people-watching, exhibition gazing, art making, cocktail sipping, and joy. 21+. 7 to 11 p.m. $20. 2600 Park Ave. S., Minneapolis; 612-871-4907. —CAMILLE LEFEVRE

SOLO

THE COWLES CENTER FOR DANCE & THE PERFORMING ARTS

Each year, the McKnight Fellowship Program selects three exceptional dancers to receive a McKnight Dancer Fellowship. In addition to a cash award, Fellows receive a commission for a new solo dance from a choreographer of their choice, who creates a work tailored just for them. For this concert, the 2016-17 Fellows offer up a program that includes contemporary ballet, experimental modern, innovative hip-hop, energetic krumping, and flaming flamenco. The artistic pairings should produce some heat. Contemporary dancer extraordinaire Krista Langberg chose Karen Sherman, whose explosive work draws from dance theater, writing, and, yes, handyman arts. Herb Johnson

III gets a piece from Tight Eyez, the creator of the wildly energetic and theatrical dance form krump, while Chitra Vairavan has commissioned the Japanese icon and experimentalist Eiko Otake. The extraordinary flamenco stylist Sachiko “La Chayi” Nishiuchi teams up with Spanish artists Pepe Torres, Luis Peña, and Angelita Vargas, and James Sewell Ballet favorite Chris Hannon is paired with award-winning ballet choreographer Gina Patterson. 7:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday. $25. 528 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis; 612-206-3636. Also Saturday —LINDA SHAPIRO

THE MINNSKY THEATER

If you were a kid of the ’80s or early ’90s, you were probably freaked out watching Labyrinth at some point. Thirty years later, Jim Henson’s whimsical nightmare fuel is ready for the Rocky Horror treatment, and the crew at Minnsky Theater is helping to make that happen. This weekend will feature a screening of the flick, starring Jennifer Connelly as a teenage girl making her way through a creepy realm in search of her brother, who has been stolen by the Goblin King (a fabulous, scenery-chewing David Bowie). During the movie, performers will act out scenes, dance, and even get the audience involved. While this is an all-ages event, your kids might laugh at the quaint special effects. So it might be best to go with friends after drinking up a buzz. 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday; 1:30 p.m. Sunday. $8-$15. 1517 Central Ave. NE, Minneapolis. Through Sunday —JESSICA ARMBRUSTER

Off-Leash Area (meaning Jennifer Ilse and Paul Herwig, proud owners of various hounds) has also been entrepreneurial when it comes to theater. Having long produced profoundly humanist and/or hilarious work in their garage, Ilse and Herwig recently rehabbed a Nokomis-area building into Art Box. Their newest production, Paws 'n' Effect, is the tale of a young girl and her stray dog. Love, understanding, and acceptance are the emotional underpinnings of the narrative, blending Ilse's choreography and Herwig's multimedia set design with a dog-friendly aesthetic.

AUTUMN BREW REVIEW 2018

HISTORIC HALL'S ISLAND

Autumn Brew Review is one of Minnesota's oldest craft beer events, with 2018 marking the 18th year for the festival. Due to construction at the Grain Belt complex, the party has temporarily moved to Hall's Island. During the day, more than 100 breweries will pour over 500 varieties at this expansive, Minnesota-centric event. Choose selections from Barrel Theory, Junkyard, Bauhaus, Surly, Town Hall, and Lupulin. There will also be several collaborations, including a Central Minnesota Roggenbier made by Beaver Island and Spilled Grain, the Cat's Pajamaz by Broken Clock and 56, and a Nut Goodie Porter, the result of an intriguing team up between Tin Whiskers and Pearson's Candy. THEATER

FRANKENSTEIN: PLAYING WITH FIRE

GUTHRIE THEATER

For having been assembled from dissected corpses, the reanimated creation of Dr. Victor Frankenstein has proven remarkably durable, surviving centuries of wildly varied depictions in virtually every artistic medium.

Minnesota playwright Barbara Field earned widespread acclaim with her adaptation, Frankenstein: Playing with Fire. The 1988 work centers on a fateful confrontation between creator and creation in the barren landscape of the Arctic Circle, and its monster is far from the lurching monstrosity of many popular interpretations. Field stayed true to Shelley's vision of a forsaken figure, articulate and sensitive, unleashing his violent wrath only after being cruelly rejected by his father and driven from society. This new revival of Field's work utilizes two sets of actors to portray the respective roles of Frankenstein and his "creature": Zachary Fine/Elijah Alexander and Ryan Colbert/Jason A. Rojas. This Rob Melrose-directed staging commemorates the 200th year of Frankenstein's tormented existence. The show is in previews September 15-20. 7:30 p.m. Tuesdays through Saturdays; 7 p.m. Sundays through October 21. $29-$78; $15-$58 previews. 818 S. Five pokey little puppies on the path to becoming big dogs with big jobs

SUNDANCE SELECTS

BY TONY LIBERA

If you're searching for even more evidence that dogs are the greatest animals on the planet, look no further than Pick of the Litter. This adorable new "documentary" (yep) from Dana Nachman and Don Hardy Jr. brings the nonprofit Guide Dogs for the Blind into the limelight and endears us forever to five young pups on a mission to become service dogs.

The movie opens with testimonials from people whose lives have been bettered by these amazing canines, not only highlighting the immense importance of these hounds but priming the tear ducts for an emotional story to come. Is Pick of the Litter a bit schmaltzy? It definitely can be (and the score doesn't help). But mostly, the filmmakers present their furry subjects with dispassion that mirrors the GDB organization's mindset. We're told early and often: Out of 800 dogs born each year, only 300 will make the cut.

And yet, it's impossible for us not to get attached.

We enter the story right at our litter's birth. Five newborn dogs come into this world, and Guide Dogs for the Blind immediately sets them on their path. Naming is done for consistency through training; this group falls on letter P in the system. Rambunctious Patriot, sweet Primrose, bitey Phil, distracted Potomac, and chill Poppet—over the next two years these primo pooches will undergo a meticulous education and hopefully pass their final tests to become guide dogs. However, Pick of the Litter makes it very clear: These dogs can fail out, or be "career changed" as GDB puts it, at any time.

While it's not necessarily a cutthroat undertaking, it is, out of necessity, pretty strict. After all, GDB needs to be 100 percent confident in its animals' abilities, as they will have a person's life in their paws. One pup has issues with his teenage handler and is promptly moved; another is brought back to the facility with almost zero explanation. In a lot of ways, the movie becomes more about the different human reactions to the process. For dogs and humans alike, it can be as tough as it is rewarding.

As a whole, Pick of the Litter provides a straightforward look at the world of guide dogs, but with an 81-minute runtime, we're not really doing a deep dive into a subject that is undoubtedly much more complex. It's somewhat surprising that the movie is so short given the amount of footage the filmmakers likely have. There's enough touched on to give us a basic understanding, and the trials and tribulations combined with the P litter's lovable faces keep us engaged—it's just that, as documentaries go, this isn't the most informative nor the most compelling thing out there.

With that said, anybody who loves dogs will enjoy watching Pick of the Litter. It's heartwarming enough to stir even the coldest of cat people—and for a movie like this, that's an undoubted mark of success. C+

DIAL M FOR MURDER

Gremlin Theatre keeps its production simply tension-filled

BY JAY GABLER

Dial M for Murder is best known as a 1954 Alfred Hitchcock film, but that movie was based on Frederick Knott's 1952 play. In TV movies, countless theatrical stagings, and yet more movies (1998's A Perfect Murder), the story has pleased popcorn-munchers for seven decades.

No wonder: It's a marvel of dramaturgical construction. Except for one thrillingly physical moment (see the title), it's a deliciously slow burn. The mostly British characters get a little short with one another, but they don't yell or throw punches. One man holds all the cards, and the other characters circle him with decorous insistence, trying to figure out if he's bluffing.

Gremlin Theatre's compact thrust stage makes an excellent venue for the company's tight new production. Director Brian Columbus uses the full space, and you feel like you're trapped in an escape room with these increasingly desperate characters. Ultimately, a life depends on whether the right people manage to solve the puzzle.

As a writer, Knott achieved quality rather than quantity: He finished only three plays, and, coincidentally, one of the other two—Wait Until Dark—is playing simultaneously at Theatre in the Round in an adaptation by Jeffrey Hatcher. All three pieces rely on clever premises, and Dial M has a textbook setup for a drawing-room thriller.

Having married Margot (Emily Dussault) for her money, Tony (Peter Christian Hansen) discovers that the loveless marriage has resulted in his wife taking a secret lover (Dan Hopman). Tony decides to collect his inheritance early by hiring an acquaintance (Grant Henderson) to kill Margot, making it look like a robbery gone wrong. It goes wrong, all right, but not in the way Tony expects.

Carl Schoenborn's functional scenic design is nothing like the lush and detailed set the Jungle Theater team created for their 2012 production of this play, but this cast keeps you so fascinated, you wouldn't have time to study the wallpaper anyway. Columbus has assembled a tense triangle at the story's core. Dussault plays Margot with just the right combination of intelligence and trust, and a good-natured Hopman makes us understand why Margot would lean on him.

The role of Tony is a fastball right over the plate for Hansen, a superb actor who also runs Gremlin Theatre but is not always used to strong effect in his own company's productions. He's at his best playing charming but damaged characters (his Brick in the Guthrie's 2012 Cat on a Hot Tin Roof was spot-on), and here he's a villain we love to hate. Eventually Alan Sorenson shows up as a police inspector looking to close the case, and Knott's plot does a double-flip to land firmly on its feet.

Theaters today know they're competing with the infinite array of streaming flat-screen entertainment options. Gremlin Theatre is providing ample reason to get off your couch and ditch Hitch for an absorbing and entertaining production of this classic play as it's meant to be seen: on the stage. GF

Tips For Creating A Minimal Wardrobe

It is no secret that living a more minimal life can reduce stress, be more economical, and allow you to be happier. For many people, reducing the size of their wardrobe can be difficult. In Minnesota, one of the added challenges in pairing down your closet is the seasonal changes. Over the years we end up with more scarves, coats, hats, mittens, and boots than we need. The best rule is to donate or sell items that you haven't worn in a year. At all of Pilgrim Dry Cleaners 26 locations, you can donate new or gently used children's and adults' coats and winter accessories September 17th-October 13th. We clean the coats and partner with local schools and charities to help people in our community stay warm. Our goal is to collect 10,000 coats this year. Beat the winter blues and give your life a clean start by donating coats to help the lives of others.

HAUNTED BASEMENT

BY ERIK THOMPSON

“We can do anything we want, and it’ll still be us,” Alan Sparhawk says with a mischievous laugh.

That was Low’s creative mindset as they recorded their 12th studio album, Double Negative. Guitarist/vocalist Sparhawk, drummer/vocalist Mimi Parker, and bassist Steve Garrington returned to April Base studios in Eau Claire, a “familiar and comfortable place” according to Sparhawk, where they had recorded 2015’s Ones and Sixes. The adventurous quality of that album carried over into the new sessions, with producer B.J. Burton (Bon Iver, Sylvan Esso, James Blake) once again helping Low push their music in a more fractured, experimental direction.

“After the last record, we all knew that we could take our sound a lot further, and there’s new territory we could explore,” Sparhawk says. “I feel like it’s kind of an understandable trajectory for us. We’ve experimented here and there over the years, and it’s something that’s always on the edge of our fingertips—electronics, drum machines, synths, and stuff. We knew that if we were going to dive in with B.J., it was going to be another fruitful collaboration.”

On this new, fitful collection of pieced-together fragments, the electronic-laden arrangements sound bruised and battered, as though they’d break apart entirely if held onto too tightly. Sparhawk and Parker’s foreboding vocals are nebulously tethered to the instrumentation, their lyrics arriving like echoes from a dark cave that may offer a way out or may lure us deeper inward.

Double Negative was recorded in fits and starts over the past two years, with the group recording in Eau Claire for a few days at a time before heading home to Duluth. “It was important to get away for two or three days and concentrate completely on this,” Sparhawk says. “It’s good to be on the spot, and have a set time and a place to focus. And then to be able to step away and get some distance from it, and listen to what we’ve been working on, write more, and make plans for the next session. It’s obviously a different recording process from the early days, where we’d go in and record a whole album in two days. But this way worked good for us.”

Throughout the sessions, the band couldn’t help but let the unsettling news

SHELLY MOSMAN

Low offer a fractured take on modern reality with the experimental Double Negative of the day seep into their songs. “This is very much a reaction to what was going on,” Sparhawk says. “It’s very much an expression of... sometimes despair, sometimes confusion, sometimes anger. There’s one line in the album [from “Dancing and Fire”] that I keep coming back to: ‘It’s not the end. It’s just the end of hope.’ A lot of the music on the record feels to me like, it’s very obvious that everything is completely flawed, and we are in a dire and almost traumatic situation here. How do you keep breathing? Once our fight with hope has ended, what now? What then?”

While raising these questions, the songs suggest that turning to music for comfort and answers simply isn’t enough at the moment. The splintered, distressed quality of the material speaks to the chasm between our heavily divided nation and its increasingly amoral government. “The fragmenting of the songs and the fragmenting of the voices is a reflection of how even more absurd structure and reality becomes with each passing day," Sparhawk says with a deep sigh.

The adventurous quality of the songs is remarkable coming from a band 25 years into their career, as is their decision to work with a producer who challenges their recording methods. "Working with B.J., a lot of the studio process is manipulating things. You put down a simple sound and then twist it, re-record it, distort it, slow it down, speed it up—and you kind of use that as another palette," says Sparhawk. "The sky is the limit with him. He's very open to anything we want to try. He prefers to make sounds that no one has ever heard before. We're always experimenting with structure, that's just the nature of the band. The fact that a lot of our songs are slower, it forces us to be a little bit different with the way we structure and assemble a song. Sometimes the new stuff is so fragmented and so fractured it almost seems like, 'Was this actually a song?' And the hope is that it still is."

As challenging, jarring, and moving as the 11 songs that make up Double Negative are, Sparhawk says that the studio versions will be transformed in a live setting. "I don't think it'd be interesting for people to see us try and duplicate what's on the record," he says. "There's a spirit about the record. And then there are the songs. Underneath all of that sound are still songs, and most of them we can play a version of on drums, bass, and a guitar. We've been comfortable with that separation [between studio and live sound] for a few years now. Making a record is a whole different process. That changes when you're in front of people and your hands are on an instrument and you've got to sing a song in real time."

No matter how experimental the new album is, Sparhawk still believes in the power of a group of musicians creating with rock instruments. "I think there's still possibilities with drums, bass, and guitar. I really believe that if we stick to it, and keep making music that we feel strongly about, that will come through. I hope it's not because I'm old-fashioned, but there's just something a lot more real about people on stage actually using their flesh to hit something to make sound."

Double Negative is an album of and for these times, an uncompromising examination of the here and now. And Low still manage to shock us after all these years.

"The studio, for us, is about surprises," says Sparhawk. "Coming up with something you didn't know existed, or didn't know was possible. Surprising yourself, where an idea you didn't think much of ends up being a really great song. That's the fun of the studio. If you knew what you were going to make when you went in, I don't think it would be nearly as interesting." CP

Gay and Lonely

Is there any cure for these lonesome blues?

I'm a fortysomething gay male. I'm single and cannot get a date or even a hookup. I'm short, overweight, average looking, and bald. I see others, gay and straight, having long-term relationships, getting engaged, getting married, and it makes me sad and jealous. Some of them are jerks—and if them, why not me? Here's the part that's hard to admit: I know something is wrong with me, but I don't know what it is or how to fix it. I'm alone and I'm lonely. I know your advice can be brutal, Dan, but what do I have to lose?

ALONE AND FADING

"AAF said to be brutal, so I'm going to start there: You might not ever meet anyone," said Michael Hobbes, a reporter for HuffPost who recently wrote a mini-book-length piece titled "Together Alone: The Epidemic of Gay Loneliness."

"At every age, in every study, gay men are less likely to be partnered, cohabiting, or married than our straight and lesbian counterparts. Maybe we're damaged, maybe we're all saving ourselves for a Hemsworth, but spending our adult lives and twilight years without a romantic partner is a real possibility. It just is."

And it's not just gay men. In Going Solo: The Extraordinary Rise and Surprising Appeal of Living Alone, sociologist Eric Klinenberg unpacked this remarkable statistic: More than 50 percent of adult Americans are single and live alone, up from 22 percent in 1950. Some are unhappy about living alone, but it seemed that most—at least according to Klinenberg's research—are content.

"Maybe there is something wrong with AAF, but maybe he's just on the unlucky side of the statistics," said Hobbes. "Finding a soul mate is largely out of our control. Whether you allow your lack of a soul mate to make you bitter, desperate, or contemptuous is not. Learn to take rejection gracefully—the way you want it from the dudes you're turning down—and when you go on a date, start with the specificity of the person sitting across from you, not what you need from him. He could be your Disney prince, sure. But he could also be your museum buddy or your podcast co-host or your afternoon 69er or something you haven't even thought of yet."

I am a 55-year-old gay male. I am hugely overweight and have not had much experience with men. I go on a variety of websites trying to make contact with people. However, if anyone says anything remotely complimentary about me, I panic and run. A compliment about my physical appearance? I shut down the profile. I don't like being like this. I just believe in being honest. And if I'm honest, I'm ugly. The face, even behind a big-ass beard, is just not acceptable. I have tried therapy, and it does nothing. How do I get past being ugly and go out and get laid?

UNAPPEALING GIANT LOSER YEARS

"I'm not sure I even believe in the word 'ugly' anymore," said Hobbes. "No matter what you look like, some percentage of the population will be attracted to you. Maybe it's 95 percent or maybe it's 5 percent, but they are out there. When you find them, do two things: First, believe them. Second, shut up about it."

In other words: Just because you wouldn't want to sleep with you, UGLY, that doesn't mean no one wants to sleep with you.

"I remember reading an interview with Stephen Fry, where he said that when he first started out as an actor, people would come up to him and say, 'You were so great in that play!' and his first response would be, 'No, I was terrible,'" said Hobbes. "He thought he was being modest, but what he was really doing, he realized later, was being argumentative. Eventually, he started to just say, 'Thank you.'"

Hobbes thinks you should try to be like Fry, a big dude with a cute husband: "The next time someone tells him they're into big dudes with beards, don't argue, don't panic, and don't hesitate. Just say 'Thank you' and let the conversation move on."

Hi Guys. You did well on Jacks are wild but did you get paid for it. Dumping you are as much fun as a jail cell. Smudge and Meg you are my joys ... But you Dumping have a legacy to share. Now is the time for your trunk of beads and feathers. You were younger and more foolish but now you are a professional. See you ASAP
